JEFF TELLS ABOUT HIS DREAM OF BIG VICTORYGreat Scrapper Tells How He Knocked Out Johnson, in Just Four Rounds.

THINKS IT WILL COME TRUE

For the second time within a month Jim Jeffries has dreamed that he knocked out Jack Johnson in four rounds.

A great many battles, of course, are settled in dreams. Bill Squires dreamed that he knocked out Burns and Jim Corbett dreamed that he beat Fitz. Sometimes they come true and very often they repeat with the reverse English.

Jeffries, however, is one of our best little dreamers. Before every big fight Jeff has at least two dreams concerning the result. He is extremely nervous just prior to a big go, and his troubled sleep is the result of these dreams.

Here is the dream:

"Four rounds was all the fight went, and I won with a left-hand hook to the jaw. As I remember the thing now, it was a very warm day. I had never fought in the open air before and the light kept me squinting all the time. Johnson and I tossed a coin, for corners and he won, taking the chair with the sun to his back. In my corner the sun was right in my eyes, and Kid McCoy, who was behind me, held a parasol over my head as I sat there waiting for the bell to ring. He kept telling me funny stories. Tim McGrath was a great fellow for taking a man's mind off the fight by telling these stories, and McCoy had me giggling like a big kid at the jokes.

"I was a bit nervous at that. My first real fight in about seven years, you know, and the mob, buzzing and looking at me like gawks, made me fidgety. I don't remember much about the first three rounds except that I missed a lot. My eye wasn't right for distance. I could see Johnson's black, shining head in front of me, but every time I let go it seemed that he wasn't there. The sun was awfully warm on my head and shoulders. It reminded me of the night I fought Sharkey. They had about 10,000 electric lights over the ring for the moving pictures and it was like fighting in an oven.

"Old Billy Jordan was the referee—yes, I remember Bill hopping around. Seems funny having Jordan as referee, but I remember that we had an awful fuss over the referee and finally all hands decided that Billy was the one man who suited us all.

"The sun that day was low, and if I ever got to that side of the ring where it hit me in the face I always backed around until I got Johnson over there and had my foot to it.

"My mouth was swollen from Jabs, I remember, and it felt as though a bee had stung me. Neither one of us was bleeding at all. I know that my lips bothered me, and the knuckle on my right hand was bad from where I belted Johnson on the head. When I went to my corner in the third round McCoy told me to slam when Johnson did, and that the chances of a clean punch were better if I could connect.

"We got close just after the bell and exchanged punches to the body. I know mine seemed to sting him, as he fell on my shoulder just for a second after we landed. I could hear a terrific shout. Someone, or rather all, in my corner were waving their hands to rush him. I waded in and forced him toward his corner. He shot out his left at my nose again, and I hooked the left over on his chin.

"There he goes! they yelled. He fell on the ropes; just sank like a brick chimney hit in the middle by a cannon ball. His knees sagged and refused the weight of his body. His head hit the lower rope and as Jordan counted the 10 seconds off I stood against the post in my corner. I could hear the howls, 'Jeff wins, Jeff wins!'

"I guess I was so excited that I woke up and then again I heard, 'Jeff wins!' I rubbed my eyes and sat up to listen. It was Berger on the 'phone in the hall telling Gatch that I won a bet from him that we left to Berger to decide. 'Yes, Jeff wins,' Berger kept saying, and then I jumped out of bed to tell him about the dream.

"I'm pretty good on dreams, and think that this one will come true surely. The very fact of me knocking him out with my left is so true that it makes me feel good. I never knocked a man out in my life with a right-hand punch. I never put all of my force into a punch, either, except in this dream, and I sure did unbutton that with a vengeance."

OPPONENT FOR NELSON.

Wolgaast is Now the Logical Candidate for That Honor.

Ad Wolgaast brushed another obstacle from his path toward the lightweight championship of the world the other night, and Lew Powell's rush toward the highest honors was cut short. Wolgaast carried the fight to his foe at all times, swinging away all the time and the clever Powell was unable to fathom a defense for the German, who seemed fazed by none of the punches that were showered toward him.

The general opinion of the critics at the ringside at the conclusion of the go was that Wolgaast not only had proved his right to battle with Nelson for the championship, but that he had shown the necessary caliber to take the crown away from the Dane.

When the two boxers appeared there was general comment over the difference in their size. Powell seemed to have the advantage in every way. He appeared to be at least six or seven pounds the heavier, had the longer reach and the backers of the coast boy who had bet 10 to 6 and 10 to 7 leaned back, confident that the little bunch of pluck and muscle from Wisconsin would be battered down by Powell.

Wolgaast, however, was of a different frame of mind. He nailed into Powell at the start, swinging both hands like flails. Ad had the better of the first three sessions by a wide margin, and again had the shade in the fourth. The little fellow from Cadillac kept up his good work, and at the end of the seventh round had a marked advantage. Had a decision been rendered then he would have been a sure winner.

Powell tried vainly to stop the rushing little fellow opposite him, who seemed possessed of a thousand arms, but all his cleverness netted him nothing. The invader kept piling up the points and at the end of the seventh session it was certain that nothing but a knockout could bring victory to the coast boy.

Powell tried many wild swings in the closing rounds, but Wolgaast kept out of their way, and at the end the referee raised his hand in token of victory.

RETURN TO CONFERENCE!

This is the Cry Set Up By Students of the University.

For the first time since Michigan's withdrawal from the conference, undergraduate sentiment at Ann Arbor is demanding a return to that organization. The board of control of athletics has promised that it will take whatever action the undergraduates advocate and as a large part of the student body favors a return to the western alliance, provided the conference schools will grant a request for reinstatement, there is sure to be a hard fight.

The Michigan Daily, which has declared itself in favor of a return to the conference, will say editorially in today's issue:

"Michigan's recent athletic victories over Pennsylvania and Minnesota have done much to restore its prestige; they alienated the critics, who would have had us believe that Fielding H. Yost has been outwitted by new football, and they served to show the east that elsewhere than over the Alleghenies is the game of football known and enjoyed. But they did more than this; they made possible a dignified request on the part of Michigan for readmission to active membership in the Western Intercollegiate Athletic association—a request that now can be made without any semblance of humiliation, and the making of which we now essay to advocate."

MAY OUST WILLIAMS.

Alumni Coaching May Be Introduced at University of Minnesota.

Minneapolis, Dec. 2.—A movement has been started by University of Minnesota alumni to oust Dr. H. L. Williams as head coach of the football team and institute alumni coaching, fifteen petitions being circulated among university alumni asking the removal of Coach Williams.

Several former goopher football players and one prominent member of the faculty are behind the movement, and

MORDECAI BROWN DEMANDS
$8,000 FOR HIS SERVICESCubs' Star Pitcher Latest to Show

Question.

IF REFUSED HE WON'T WORK

Chicago, Dec. 2.—Mordecai Brown, the all-important factor in the winning of three championships of the National league by the Cubs, may not be a member of the West Side team next year. Whether or not the peerless three-fingered twirler shoots his famous hook curve across the plate to the consternation of Giants and Pirates alike rests with President Murphy. If the boss of the former world's champions will pay Brown his price the great pitcher will be back in the ranks, otherwise he will not play.

It developed yesterday that Brown had told a fellow player at the close of the past season that it would cost the Chicago club the sum of $8,000 per year for his services in the future, and that unless he received that amount he would not report. Brown is known to all his friends as a fellow who seldom talks unless he means exactly what he says, and although he is not yet in the ranks of the holdouts, he is dangerously close to that body which every winter furnishes gossip for the fans while the players are resting.

It is not probable that Murphy will meet Brown's demands without a fight, and there may be a merry little set-to between manager and pitcher before the matter is settled one way or the other.

Brown signed a three years' contract in 1927 which called for a modest salary for a player of his standing. In fact, pitchers whom he was defeating day after day were drawing more money, but Mordecai lived up to his contract, though he did get a bonus or two now and then. This contract, which, it is said, called for $3,500 a year, expired October 15 last. It was then that Brown declared himself.

"NO WAR" SAYS BAN.

Johnson Believes National League Troubles Will Be Settled.

"There will be no war," said President Ban Johnson of the American league, while discussing the presidential campaign of the National league. "I expect to see everything smoothed out lovely," he continued. "John M. Ward will not be elected is the way I have it sized up. I scarcely can conceive of the National league magazine going ahead and electing a man about whom so much has been shown."

"I see where there has been a lot of talk about the possibilities of Pittsburgh and Cincinnati jumping to the American league. Such a thing could only happen in the case of a great disturbance in baseball, and that disturbance isn't going to happen. Of course I would like to see Pittsburgh in our league. It's a grand ball town and we tried to get it once. It would make a splendid jump between the east and the west."

"Cincinnati would also be most acceptable, even if only to get Manager Clarke Griffith back in our league. I've always been a great admirer of Griffith. But there isn't a chance. Moreover, I don't think that a ten-club league would be advisable. The eight-club organization is the ideal one."

OPPOSITION FOR THE NAPS?

Promoters May Put American Association Team in Cleveland.

Cleveland, Dec. 2.—That the rumor of an American Association invasion of American and National league cities and the precipitation of a baseball war is not all rumor was given confirmation here today by W. F. Eirik, county commissioner of Cuyahoga County, who asserted that he and his associates had the promise of an American association franchise and were closing a deal for a park.

Eirik declared it his intention to obtain a park on the West Side, at least five miles from the American league park here, and explained that his associates and those who promised a franchise for Cleveland planned to give this city games in the absence of the American league club.

Baseball men here connected with organized ball scout the Eirik declaration, but the latter as persistently insists he is in the fight to stay. "We will not have a team before 1911," he says. "Preparation of a park and signing of a team, under the difficulty we may encounter, will require that much time. But we will be on hand with an American association team in 1911, mark by words."

WORSHIP.

I've always thought that if I had my choice, my life could express worship. I'd choose for it to be praise—Sonny's Father, in Century Magazine.

today they declared there was little doubt but that they would carry their point.

The object of the petition, according to men in charge of the work, is to "harmonize the opposing factions at the university and to give us a good team in 1910."

The object of the alumni is to use graduate system of coaching, which is in vogue at Yale and Harvard. There will be one head coach, an alumnus and six assistant coaches. Seven coaches are to form a conference, which will discuss all matters for the good of the team. This conference of coaches will always be open to suggestions from other alumni.

Ed Rogers and "Punk" Webster, former Minnesota football stars, are mentioned for position as head coach.

Rescued and Eloped Via Auto

MRS. FRED L. HARLEY.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 2.—A romance which had its beginning five years ago, when Miss Ethel B. Shive, of 5741 Spruce street, was found lying unconscious in the middle of a lonely road by Fred H. Harley of Quakertown, Pa., as he was touring in his automobile, culminated happily recently when the couple eloped in the same automobile to Whitmarsh, where they were married in St. Thomas' Protestant Episcopal church by Rev. A. J. Miller.

When Miss Shive recovered consciousness five years ago she found her future husband bending over her, while his chauffeur broke speed laws in search for a physician. An attachment sprang up, and before Miss Shive had recovered from her injuries the couple were engaged.

Opposition on the part of the girl's mother caused the engagement to be broken off, and they parted. They did not meet again until a few weeks ago. They had not forgotten each other in the meantime, however, and when Mr. Harley suggested an elopement Miss Shive signified her willingness.

Then Mr. Harley, who is the son of J. S. Harley, a wealthy manufacturer of Quakertown, and who related to succeed Congressman Wagner in Washington, invited Miss Shive to his home, and obtained a license. He then drove on to Germantown where Miss Shive met him. She had informed her mother she was going to spend the night with friends in Germantown, and

NOVEL IDEA SUGGESTED.

Wisconsin Sportsmen Believe Deer Could Be Raised Commercially.

From Wisconsin comes the suggestion of raising deer commercially as a means to increase their number and prevent the ultimate extinction of the species. We quote from a Marinette exchange as follows:

"In the opinion of local sportsmen, one of the best plans for keeping our Wisconsin forests stocked with deer is to allow Wisconsin people to raise deer for commercial purposes and to sell the venison from the animals raised in this manner. In his opinion, this plan would eliminate pot hunters who are at present the bane of all true sportsmen. The pot hunters are hunters who hunt simply for their stomachs and kill as much venison as it is possible for them to get home safely."

"Some of the states in which deer have grown scarce have adopted the system and have found that it works well. Some parties who have taken up the work have raised as many as a hundred deer in a season and have derived a substantial income from the business. The deer propagate rapidly and when fed and sheltered during the winter time, get through the season with but small losses from illness and accidental death. In Iowa one farmer had a herd of 300 deer in an eighty acre tract which he had fenced in with a high wire fence. He made more money off the deer than he did off the other eighty acres of his farm."

"The local hunters interested claim that by the passage of a law in this state allowing the commercial raising of deer that venison would be so plentiful that the present demand for it would in a large measure cease and the hunters that hunted deer would hunt for the pure sport of hunting. To many venison is not as palatable as is good beef and it is only the scarcity and great demand for it that makes them anxious to get in as an article of food during the season."

Thus it is that we find local people who will spend hours walking and waiting to get a few slices of venison. By making venison plentiful, parties who desire it only because of its scarcity and high price would cut it out as an article of food and our wild deer would profit as a result."
